Special Pedagogy, Master's Degree, Module: Language and Speech Disorder /Speech Therapy/,

1. Qualifications and competencies
2. General and specialized training
3. General and specific skills
4. Opportunities for professional realization

According to the requirements of the national qualification framework, two training options are offered in the Special Pedagogy Master's Degree Programme - Speech Therapy module, depending on the specialty and the basic preparation of the candidates holding a bachelor's degree:

- A three-semester period of study for candidates with a bachelor's degree in the same specialty
- A four-semester period of study for candidates with a bachelor's degree in a different professional field.

1. Qualifications and competencies

The master's programme is aimed at providing specialists with a high degree of academic preparation - broad general pedagogical, psychological, theoretical and practical-methodological competences for working with people with special educational needs.

The training of master's degree graduates includes knowledge, skills and competencies in the field of special pedagogy and related scientific fields, such as: biological and medical sciences, psychological sciences, pedagogical sciences, linguistics and psycholinguistics and other scientific fields.

The master's programme in special pedagogy includes basic general and specialized modular training in the module: Language and Speech Disorders /Speech Therapy /. It prepares motivated and highly qualified specialists to meet the public needs for trained staff to carry out the education reform and provide all the necessary conditions for the social and educational integration of children with special educational needs in conditions of equal access to quality education and independent way of living. In the process of education, specific knowledge is acquired about the cognitive and personal development of children with communication disorders, intellectual disabilities, hearing and visual impairments, learning difficulties and multiple disabilities for their inclusive education and rehabilitation.

The content of the training in the educational qualification degree "Master" in Special Pedagogy meets the needs for radical changes in the theory and practice of training and education of individuals with special educational needs on the basis of the important contemporary principles of equality and the right for quality education in an inclusive educational and social environment for all children, regardless of their differences by means of:

- recognition of and tolerance for differences;
- teamwork and cooperation between specialists and parents of children; attracting parents as partners;
- placing the child at the centre of the educational process;
- preparation of an individual programme for education and development of each child based on the positive aspects of his/her development and strengths;
- learning material and discovering facts, objects and ideas and the connections between them both independently and through the use of interactive methods, as well as stimulating the creative abilities for objectification of qualitatively acquired knowledge.

Purpose of the training under the programme. The aim of the master's program with a module - Language and Speech Disorders /Speech Therapy / is significantly higher compared to the bachelor's degree in order to prepare qualified staff for the implementation of inclusive education of individuals with special educational needs. The purpose of the training of specialists under the second module is aimed primarily at training staff /special educators/ to work with people with intellectual disabilities.

The necessary logical connections and relations have been achieved in the various forms of training – in-class and out-of-class studies, as well as between the compulsory, elective and optional courses included in the curriculum, which is an important prerequisite for achieving the overall goal of the programme.
